International Programs

Lesley’s International Students and Programs

by Kathryn Furlong

Lesley is becoming increasingly international. Once again the College emerges as a leader, in its recognition of the need for intercultural training and global understanding. All told, hundreds of students are enrolled in Graduate School special institutes and seminars on off-campus programs. PMBI has international students too, as well as Americans assigned to foreign countries.

One million foreign students were attending U.S. colleges by 1990, according to the American Council of Education’s Committee on Foreign Students and International Policy. During 1980-81, 2.7 percent of students were international. This figure could rise to 10 percent of all students in the early 1990s.

The presence of foreign students could be one of the most powerful themes in higher education,” said Richard Berendzen, Chairman of the ACE Committee and President of American University. “Few colleges are prepared to cope with such an influx of foreign students... Educators need to be educated... There is a great deal... to learn.”

The Committee recommended that institutions give moral support to international students and look for ways to achieve greater integration with American students.

“Foreign students,” according to the ACE Committee, “are all too often an unrealized, undersitized, and unintegrated resource for relieving the startling lack of knowledge among most American undergraduates about international matters.”

UNDERGRADUATE FOREIGN STUDENTS

Helga Braein, Undergraduate foreign student advisor, Associate Professor of Physical Education, and a native of Norway, says, “I’d like the Lesley community to be more aware of the foreign students. They’re good resource people. Let’s use them. There’s a world outside of Lesley.” During the coming year, she plans to have open intercultural seminars of the new International Club, at which foreign students will talk about their countries.

Piyachat Ruengvisesh, ’86, from Bangkok, finds that many Lesley students do not know where Thailand is, for example. “Lack of geographic knowledge is a common failing among American students.” Piyachat herself, as well as her family are very cosmopolitan. Her parents went to American colleges, one sister is in San Francisco, and a younger sister plans to study art in Japan or France. In the future, Piyachat would like to set up her own kindergarten with a program for special-needs children in Bangkok which has none now.

“I like Lesley,” she says, “because it is a small college with small classes. I can really get to know my professors.”

Ming Lee Chee, ’85, of Singapore, says, “I’m glad I came to Lesley. I could not get such good teachers at home. They treat you as a person here and always say ‘Hi’ first. That’s really nice.”

Ming Lee hopes that Lesley will send college catalogs to the American Embassy in Singapore. Because she had no college counselors at her school, she asked the Embassy to recommend American colleges which had programs in Special Education. The Embassy personnel had no information and suggested she go to an American 2-year college (she attended Endicott for six months). Only then did she discover Lesley.

Ming Lee takes six courses a semester and works very hard. “I’m so afraid of failure,” she says. “I know my parents are paying so much.” She is also studying Japanese at Harvard Extension because she wants to work in an American school in Japan after she graduates.

Because Ming Lee is 24 years old, she would prefer to live with students her own age. At present she has a room in White Hall, which houses primarily freshmen.

GRADUATE SCHOOL PROGRAMS

Mexico and Brazil

The Graduate School has several international programs, according to Assistant Dean James Magee. One is a Master’s degree program in Education directed at teachers in American schools in Guadalajara, Mexico, and Brasilia, Brazil. “We send professors twice a year to teach courses,” he says. “Over a period of two years and 32 credit hours, students can complete their Master’s degree.”

In January, Joan Fisher, Teaching Resources Librarian and Lecturer, taught a course in Guadalajara on media, and Richard Wylie, Vice President and Dean of the GS, a course in Brasilia on current issues in education.

Middle East

More than forty students from the Middle East attended Summer Institute programs and courses at Lesley last summer which were geared to their needs, for example, Middle School Administration and Early Childhood Education Institutes. Eight of the forty students entered regular degree programs at Lesley; four are doing Independent Study for a Master’s degree and four summers-only programs in Education, according to Dr. Magee. They live in five Middle Eastern countries and come to Lesley in the summer to be with their families.

Professionals in International Education

Another GS program is P.I.E.S. (Professionals in International Education). These Master’s degree and C.A.G.S. programs are also under the direction of Dr. Magee and of Program Counselor Paula Gassmann, who provides services to all GS International Students. Three kinds of programs are attracted to P.I.E.S.: returned Peace Corps volunteers who want to develop marketable skills based on their experiences; foreign nationals who want to develop intercultural skills and to work either here or abroad; and American students who have a certain expertise and who want to develop intercultural skills. The Americans must have knowledge of a second language and have lived or worked abroad.

“Some of our students,” says Dr. Maurice Stem, faculty member and Director of International Development of Academic Programs, “are interested in foreign-student advising or preparing American managers who work for multinational corporations and their families for living abroad.”

Marion was Lesley's first International Club President last year and was also active in the International Student Association of New England. She says, "I was lucky with my internship last spring. I got exactly what I wanted at the World Affairs Council. I talked to foreign student advisors from twenty schools and developed a three-hour program dealing with cultural adjustment."

All P.I.E.S. students are expected to complete an internship (considered "the heart of the program") and a thesis or project as part of a 38-credit program.

American student Barbara Bresnahan is a freelance translator and a substitute teacher at multi-cultural classrooms in Boston and Brookline. Before joining the P.I.E.S. program, she was Director of the Berlitz School in Buffalo and Director of Translations in Boston. Barbara is an accomplished multilingual and has lived in Mexico and Spain.

"I knew what I wanted," says Barbara. "I kept looking for the right program. I saw a Lesley ad in The Boston Globe and I thought, This sounds fantastic. I wanted a program with more emphasis on skills and less on theory, in a small college with small classes. That was Lesley."

Barbara wants to work in non-traditional adult education in Mexico, Colombia, or Peru. "Because these are traditional countries, there are gaps between formal and practical education. For example, there is no place for the businessman who has contacts with the U.S. to learn English or business subjects." Barbara is interested in curriculum design, evaluation, and the administration of special programs through a university, like Lesley's Adult Degree Option Program or P.M.B.I. (Programs in Management for Business and Industry).

At Lesley, Barbara is taking three regular courses plus three one-credit seminars in Intercultural practice, international consulting and immigration, and grant and proposal writing.

"The way the program is arranged is absolutely wonderful," she says, "a perfect balance between theory and practice."

Another P.I.E.S. student Viola Morris illustrates this balance well. She has a six-month internship in the Sudan, teaching and working at the Faculty of Economics and Rural Development.

"The P.I.E.S. Program," says Dr. Sterns, "is another example of Lesley taking the lead by recognizing a need."
Education

Education programs, under the direction of Associate Dean June Fox, usually have a range of five to eight foreign students a year.

Rita Hogan-Bassey of the Ministry of Education, Nigeria, came to Lesley in April, 1981, was awarded a Master's degree in Early Childhood Education in May, 1982, and has just completed her requirements for a Certificate of Advanced Graduate Studies in Early Childhood.

"I have been very satisfied with my programs in Early Childhood," she says. "I particularly enjoyed visiting local preschools and seeing the practical side of the theory I learned at Lesley."

When she returns home, she plans to work with teachers of fourteen preschools and to run inservice training workshops, which were inspired by the Kindergarten Conference. As part of her C.A.G.S. program, she also designed a program for training teacher aides and a curriculum guide for use in her state of Cross River, one of the nineteen states of Nigeria.

Rita first heard of Lesley from a planning and research officer of the Ministry of Education. He had gone to a seminar in Bradford, England, where he met Lesley Exchange students and faculty, and learned about the College's fine education programs.

Undergraduate STEP Program

Lesley's Undergraduate Student Exchange Program (STEP) is affiliated with colleges in Hull and Bradford, England. Lenore Parker and seven Lesley students spent the fall in Hull, while eight Hull students came to Lesley. In January, again there was an exchange with eight Lesley students at Bradford and nine from Bradford at Lesley. During their time abroad, all Lesley students work in British schools to complete part of their student teaching.

The Hull students in their Cambridge and Boston placements were visited by John Hurst, their Senior Lecturer from Humberside College of Higher Education (formerly Hull College). "The U.S. is different from what I expected," he said. "I didn't appreciate the tremendous mixture of cultures and their interaction."

Most of his students, he said, have a grant which covers food and accommodations, but not airfare. "The benefits of the exchange are well worthwhile, however. This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity."

The Hull students had a variety of placements. Patricia Nattriss, who had been an office worker for years and was interested in women's rights, was placed with the organization, 9 to 5; Michael Spencer worked with emotionally disturbed and learning disabled adolescents at Charles River Academy in Cambridge; and Angela Coultous taught second grade in The Tobin School in Cambridge. She is interested in sex stereotyping which she said is not as prevalent here as in England.

They enjoyed living in Reed Hall and talking to the sixteen American students in the house. On the whole, they said, their social life proved to be almost as interesting and educational as their placements.

Lesley student Madeline Levine, '84, went to Bradford last year where she taught American History and English to 7th and 8th grades. "I was the first Middle School person to go to England," she said. "The experience of being in a different culture helped me as a teacher."

"Because I come from New York," Madeline laughed, "everyone thought I was rich and carried a gun, the result of American movies and television programs."

Ann Buchsbaum, '85, is in Bradford now. She is looking forward to seeing how another school system works, particularly its disciplinary techniques. She said the English have outstanding classroom management.

In preparation for the exchange, Ann and the other Lesley students attended seminars on England every other week for two months. In addition, each student took along instructional materials. Ann was well equipped with a book of pictures of her life in the U.S. and by her experiences student teaching in a Boston bilingual school. “This will be good preparation for teaching Pakistani in her life in the U.S. and by her experiences student teaching in a Boston bilingual school. “This will be good preparation for teaching Pakistani in Bradford,” she said.

PMBI Programs in Management for Business and Industry (PMBI) also has its international side. Lawrence Cade, of the Framingham 12/82 master's class, is Manager of Revenue Support for Digital Equipment Corporation's (DEC) South Pacific region. His PMBI weekly classes and work-related curriculum coupled with feedback from his DEC work group and PMBI classmates have been very useful to him on the job, he says.

He is still attending classes and is working on his master's thesis on the different kinds of stress experienced by black and white managers, and expects to graduate in May ’84.

Linda Escobedo, Director and Dean, says PMBI has several foreign students and a number of American students who travel abroad in connection with their jobs or who are on foreign assignments.

One such is Ray Muscatel, ComputerVision B’78/82, who is currently on assignment with his company in Japan. He has finished his PMBI course work and is now completing the rest of his requirements for his Bachelor's degree in Organizational Behavior.

SUMMARY

What emerges from all of this is that Lesley's international programs and students have brought diversity and enrichment to the campus.

"An increasing globalization is evident at all levels of society," according to the International Studies Program catalog. "The recent influx of refugees and migrants is substanti­ally changing the population in the United States and other countries of the world.... As the world becomes increasingly interrelated, we are faced with the challenge of learning to live and work with others from various cultures, and with the need to train professionals who can constructively deal with cultural differences."

Lesley is facing these challenges and once again is a leader in provid­ing intercultural training and understanding.

The Kindergarten Conference

by Kathryn Furlong

More than 2400 educators attended the 23rd Annual Kindergarten Conference in November. Once again it was under the direction of Mary Mindess, Professor of Education, and Moyra Traupe, Assistant Coordinator.

Curriculum Development about Native Americans

Jacquelyn Dean, of the Iroquois Confederacy, and DeLaura Saunders, a Choctaw from Mississippi, talked about stereotypes commonly associated with Native Americans, e.g., tomahawks and scalps, and about the public's lack of understanding of the differences among the tribes.

It is estimated that three to four hun­dred tribes live in the U.S. They speak an equivalent number of languages and have different ceremonies and customs. For example, the Western and Plains Indians wear feathers, while the Eastern do not. Four to six thousand Indians live in the Boston area, with the dominant population, Micmac.

The Boston Indian Council has developed a K–5 curriculum for the Boston Public schools which helps address these problems.

Helping Children Cope with Stress

Avis Brenner, Professor Emeritus, Lesley College, helped participants to develop useful criteria for judging the effectiveness of children's unconscious attempts to cope with stressful situations. (She is the author of Helping Children to Cope with Stress.)

In a series of group discussions which followed: Dr. Brenner talked about identi­fying the children of alcoholic parents. At play, they often giggle, fall down, and pretend to drink gin. They tend to be loners with a poor self-image, and feel that they are the cause of the parents' alcoholism.

Hariett Sufin, of the Boston University School of Education, said some children of divorce invent siblings and feel rejected by parents.

Ann McDonough, Assistant Director of CCDA, leads a discussion group on children of divorce.
How Children Learn to Read and Write

Don Holdaway of New Zealand discussed the reading difficulties of the Maori and Polynesian students in New Zealand schools. He said, "Dick and Jane do not reflect the lifestyle and native languages of these children."

In his study of emergent literacy, Dr. Holdaway found that children who were read good stories by their parents in preschool years make the greatest progress in school. “The multi-racials” have not had this experience at home. He found that by using books with a strong storyline, the multi-racials learned to read in a very short time. His developmental approach is today an integral part of New Zealand’s National School Policy.

Dr. Holdaway is this year leading a program in early literacy development in the Cambridge Public Schools.

Dealing with Inappropriate Behavior

Neal Klein, Assistant Professor of Guidance at Lesley and a psychotherapist, and Kathryn Demers, ‘84, showed how the interpersonal approach helps children who behave inappropriately, use words to control their behavior.

PMBI Graduations

On Friday, September 30, PMBI held its second Graduation. Seventeen students were awarded Bachelor of Science in Organizational Behavior degrees and fifteen Master of Science in Management degrees. Conferring the thirty-two degrees were Mrs. Catherine N. Stratton, Chairperson, Board of Trustees; President Don Orton; and Linda L. Escobedo, Dean and Director of PMBI. The Commencement Address was given by Susan Astle, Manager of Business Services for the Federal Marketing Services Department of Wang Laboratories. Mrs. Astle received her B.S. degree in Organizational Behavior from Lesley in May.

On January 27, 1984, approximately 45 more students received bachelor’s and master’s degrees at PMBI’s third Commencement. PMBI now has a total of 190 alumni.

1984 Kindergarten Conference

The 1984 New England Kindergarten Conference will be held in Randolph, on Friday, November 16. If you would like to receive the program and registration materials next fall, send a postcard with your name and address to Maryn Traupe, New England Kindergarten Conference, Lesley College, 29 Everett Street, Cambridge, MA 02238.
Notes of Current Interest

GS Outreach Degrees
Dr. Richard Wylie, Vice President and Dean of the Graduate School, presented certificates of completion to approximately 35 master's and C.A.G.S. candidates in Denver, Colorado, early in August. These students were the first graduates of the National Outreach Program. Mary Huygel, Dean of the Program, and Joanne Micek, Coordinator, were also in attendance.

Dr. John Peper, Superintendent of Jefferson County Public Schools (Colorado), spoke on "Future Technology and Educational Opportunities for Teachers." Diplomas were granted on August 31, 1983.

Child and Community Becomes Human Services
The President George Miller has announced that the name of the Undergraduate Child and Community Program has been changed to Human Services. The degree awarded to students will remain a Bachelor of Science and will require no change in academic requirements. Coordinator Carol Street recommended the change after reviewing the pros and cons with students and faculty.

Dr. Street has suggested that the new title will connect greater professionalism and is more in line with the terminology used by professionals in the field, thereby facilitating communication. She also emphasizes that the title is a more correct indication of the actual preparation that students receive. Lesley's degree preparation, at least in the Humanities Department, indicates that our students, upon graduation, will become part of a larger and viable profession of people helping to make changes.

PEN/New England at Lesley
As of January, 1984, Lesley's Graduate Writing Program is the new home to PEN/New England. PEN (Poets, Essayist, Editors, Novelists) is an international organization of writers founded by John Galsworthy in the nineteenth century. Up to now, PEN hasn't had a home, but has been meeting at Harvard University. PEN/New England sponsors panel discussions on topics of interest to writers. Recent panels have dealt with the literary marketplace, writing biography, and dealing with rejection. Panelists have included Ann Bernays, John Irving, Justin Kaplan, Jayne Anne Phillips, Mary Robison, and John Updike.

The only one of its kind in the country, the Master's Degree Writing Program at Lesley matches each student writer with an established writer in the same genre (which may be fiction, non-fiction, poetry, drama, children's literature, or translation). Emphasis is on work done in individual meetings between student and mentor rather than in classes or workshops, though these are also available. Many PEN/New England writers are mentors in the program.

China Tour
On August 1-15, 1984, Lesley will sponsor its fourth annual tour of China designed for teachers, counselors, trainers, foreign student advisors, business people, and other professionals whose work requires an understanding of Chinese culture.

For further information, call Dr. Maurice Sterling, 886-9640, x282.

New Trustees and Corporators
On October 27, at the Annual Meeting of the Corporation, Charles H. H. Hood was elected Chairman of the Corporation, and eight new Trustees were elected: Rosalyn Holste Abrams, '67, Lesley Corporation since 1976; Edgar D. Aronson, investment company principal, Lesley Corporation since 1978; and father of Alves, '60; Kitty Duloski, '61, Director of Corporate and Association Sales for Boston Radio, John Ons Kanker, Liberty Square Investment Associates; Robert G. Ostroff, New York Financial Associates and Lesley Corporation since 1978; John A. Seller, Consultant to the National Association of Independent Schools; Catherine N. Stratton, Director of the Boston Private Industry Council; Dr. John R. Turner, Assistant Provost and Associate Dean of the Graduate School, MIT.

Also elected were four new Members of the Corporation:

Barbara Archeb, '82, Lesley Alumni Steering Committee and former Program Assistant in the GS Management Division; Tina Bokstro Beltz, '89, teacher, mother, and wife of investment firm principal; Bernard Buchbaum, Executive Vice President of Rivkin and father of Ann, '66; Lees H. Clark, President, Cambridge Trust Company.

Trustees Retreat
On November 17 and 18, fifteen Lesley Trustees held a Trustees' Retreat at Endicott House in Dedham. This was the first time that Lesley Trustees have participated in international retreat training to learn their administrative roles, according to President Don Orton.

President Orton at FETE Session
President Don Orton participated in the Brainstorming Session of the Foundation For Excellence in Teacher Education (FETE) in Washington, D.C., on September 27 and 28. Other distinguished educators also attended.

Faculty Books
Jared Kasu, Associate Professor at the Arts Institute, has received much critical acclaim on his new book, MANTALK: Personal Essays on the Male Experience and the Journey to Women's Understanding. The eminent psychologist Dr. Carl Rogers wrote, "This is a passionately personal book ... it deserves to be read, not only by men, but by all who love men."

Men, like women, are taught social roles that cause pain, rage, loneliness, and deep emotional wounds. The healing of these wounds is the subject of this book.

Last July, Nancy Roberts, GS Professor of Education, and three fellow authors of Introduction to Computer Simulation: A System Dynamics Modeling Approach, were given the 1983 Jay Wright Forrester Award at the International System Dynamics Conference in Boston. They were particularly cited for their vision bringing System Dynamics into... elementary and secondary schools.

President's Council Dinner
Don A. Orton and Kay Stratton welcomed guests at the President's Council Dinner held in Alumni Hall on December 1st. This was the second annual dinner to honor top donors to the College and it was an enjoyable evening for all. Special recognition was given to Paula Sherr Stahl, '68, for her invaluable service to Lesley as a lecturer, advisor, a trustee, and a guiding member of the ad hoc Alumni Steering Committee. As a symbol of its appreciation, the College presented Mrs. Stahl with a Lesley College chair.

Senior Elected to School Committee
Patricia Brady, '84, (a Human Services/Academic Psychology major) was elected on November 8 to the Medford School Committee. She was one of nine persons running for six positions. She says her goal is to improve discipline standards by establishing stricter rules of attendance at Medford High School.

Lesley Television Stars
Jennifer Page, Vice President, Special Projects, discussed Lesley's role in Town/Gown Relations on Channel 56's "Cambridge...USA" on September 15 and 22.

Lesley students were part of the audience of "Miller's Court" shown on October 1, on Channel 5. The issue in that feature was on peer counseling.

On August 25, John Hoffman, Director of the Threshold Program, was interviewed by Patricia Raskin, '69, on her "Positive People" show on New England Cablevision.

On September 8, Dr. Samuel Modowitz, Instructor of Psychology in the Undergraduate School, Dr. Richard Willford, Assessment Specialist at EDAC (Evaluation, Diagnosis and Assessment Center for/Bilingual Education), participated in the "People Are Talking" show with Nancy Merrill on Channel 4. As members of a specialized audience of educators, they raised questions and commented on the show's theme, the desirability of SAT's.

Lesley in Filene's Window
Four photos of Lesley were on display in Filene's window in Boston. Filene's had asked Lesley to help celebrate its 75th Anniversary.

Student Center Opens
On Wednesday, September 14, the new Student Center in Glenn Hall held an open house.

The Center, painted a cheery yellow, is open most evenings till 10 p.m. and has provided a welcome meeting place for students and college clubs.

Conference on Teenagers in Trouble
The Human Services program will sponsor a conference entitled, "Teenagers In Trouble: Avenues of Hope," to be held at Lesley on Saturday, March 31, 1984. Topics to be covered include eating disorders, pregnancy, depression and suicide, sexual abuse, substance abuse, peer counseling, and the role of power in the life of an adolescent. The keynote address will be delivered by Dr. Robert Brooks, Clinical Psychologist at McLean Hospital. For further information, contact Dr. Carol Streit, Coordinator of Human Services, at Lesley College at (617) 868-3900.

Leslie Stratton, Director of the Threshold Program, had appeared on the "Positive People" show with Nancy Merrill on Channel 4. As members of a specialized audience of educators, they raised questions and commented on the show's theme, the desirability of SAT's.
Alumni Weekend 1984
Plans are underway for the 1984 Alumni Weekend to be held June 1-3. All alumni will receive a schedule and registration information in early May. There will be special reunion activities for alumni whose graduating class year ends in 1 or 0 (e.g. 1964). If you would like to help organize an event for your class, please contact the Alumni Office at (617) 868-9600, x121.

Alumni Appointments
Four alumni have been appointed to volunteer leadership positions.
Nona Neman Frutti, '94, is the new chairperson of the Alumni Annual Fund.
Rosalyn Heletz Abramson, '67, is heading up the Peer Solicitations Program.
Bla Cicareno King, '74, has been named chairperson of the Alumni Admissions Program. This is building a national network of alumni helping with admissions.
Marjorie Stone Tanzler-Glou, '94, has accepted the position of chairperson of the 1984 Alumni Weekend.
Many thanks to these alumni for their interest and support of Lesley.

If so, write to GRADUATE CLASS NOTES and displayed her monotype technique of for Works on Paper from the National Assoc. of Women Artists. She is currently living in in September. Diana had a showing recently at printmaking at the Framingham Artists' Guild Fine Arts in Boston, as well as in many art galleries.

Carolyn McDonald, '81, who is an expressive therapist at Batelle Hospital in Greentown, also conducts group art therapy sessions at the Houseworth YMCA. She calls it part of her "Magic Circle" program which is "a positive and creative approach to personal growth." The sessions are a combination of drawing, painting, dancing, singing and drama.
