Fall 2014

Yolanda Franklin

Yolanda Franklin

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.lesley.edu/jppp

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://digitalcommons.lesley.edu/jppp/vol6/iss2/3

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by DigitalCommons@Lesley. It has been accepted for inclusion in Journal of Pedagogy, Pluralism, and Practice by an authorized editor of DigitalCommons@Lesley. For more information, please contact digitalcommons@lesley.edu.
Yolanda Franklin

As a Southerner, I find myself drawn to write about difficult personal, cultural, social, and political aspects of the South. I frequently generate poems that capture the personas, landscapes, and facets of Southern living. I like to take the point of view of an ethnographer and historiographer in my work, so I often write about family. This point of view allows my poems to portray and highlight specific personal experiences—towards a universal experience, in a nuanced way. Like Confessional Poets and poets of the New York School, I also write about the quotidian, but I purposefully push cultural, social and political envelops by evoking the personal, which invites the reader into an inescapable space. One of the signatures of my poems—a “double-helix syntax”—is a technique that elicits readers to interrogate the multiple connotations of each line while simultaneously layering these connotations from line to line and stanza to stanza to create images that evoke visceral images. This vicissitudinous effect creates caesuras and deep breaths for the reader.
These lines read like a story I wish to tell, turned
thirty-three this year.

Though dead now,
even before death,
all ability to talk or listen
was lost.

I remember
on Orange Ave.
buying a fresh bunch of collards, green as usual.

Home, visiting mom
with the kids that summer, running errands from my daughter’s to-do-list,

Drove by,
parked in front
of a makeshift produce stand, squinting for a clearer image:

Time shined a spotlight on the center of your head.
Baldly, I purchase turnips, green, right next to you.

Eyes squared towards me familiar,
the way the old
recall time.

(Now, I am the iris
out of focus). Squinting:
You don’t even notice who I am.
No One I Know Alive Today Was a Slave

--a response to a Facebook comment

If someone abducted your family, affected your present
with an infectious amnesia, then erased your past
for pure sport of profit, then forced you to bend like a scarlet ibis, slaved to pick the South’s tropical snow—the offspring
from Earth’s womb, begging not to be orphaned, but to be nursed, begging not to be last on its crucifix,
a surrogate to history, whose urgency profits only white faces—I ask
what to tell a family
still forced to bow.
I tell them
to “cotton on.”
De Oppresso Liber

I.

Texan tycoons lure masses of American soldiers into empty barrels & scope tunnels of destruction as weaponry weeps over deserts—booby-trapped Kleenexes.

Their jeweled skulls enter a darkroom, expose black wash memory & discover the dollar bill being raped well by oil wells: thirst-fatigued fowl who bow, die & disrupt this holy skyline.

II.

At dinner, Uncle Sam pitches a fork to initiate the disruption of American Gothic. It’s the fourth Thanksgiving in three years a soldier serves in The Kingdom’s blazing porridge: a traditional murder-suicide outlines a woman, infant, & child in arms amputated by the refusal of change.

III.

A dollar bill marches to taps, points at fatigued soldiers & lulls the pin as the spitting grenade hopscotches across the turbaned battlefield.

Where mirages melt under Allah’s sun, a soldier daydreams, down the scope of his rifle: there is something drier than my wife’s turkey & canned cranberries are jellied homicides.

IV.

A news reporter ambushes a wad of ones, the rubber band escapes, a dollar bill interviews a camel spider under a shaken quarter moon—a grocery clerk palms convoys of dimes, dishonorable pay scales of government issued poverty, an exchange for martyrs toting machine guns for W.I.C.— stamps, checks, food. Hunger is a Blackhawk humming; a hero waits in line for change.

American Kennel Club

At dinner, lost time forms tears. It’s my first holiday here as host in this small town that shares its traditions: Turducken, green beans & sweet potato casseroles, mac & cheese, dressing with all the fixings, here where I rent an original Florida home built when Zora wrote How It Feels to Be Colored Me, amidst astonishment of how anyone could deny themselves her company. “Tur who?” I ask. “Is that German?” My landlord brags about how Crackers laid those blonde hardwood floors, says they’re stripped now, rambles on about how a structure can withstand any storm. Over dinner, she shares with my family how difficult it is to bury a thirteen-year old lab, pipes up: “Good news is: we found a litter of beautiful black labs—their mother’s a blonde, their father, chocolate.” Another interjects, then passes the near burnt Turducken: a turkey stuffed with a chicken, that’s stuffed with a duck, initiates a sorority of laughter— “How could they litter black puppies?”